"I thought I needed the full 'college experience'. I started taking general education classes for a nursing program at a big university, and I quickly realized that this format was not for me. I struggled with the large classroom sizes, and I never spoke to my professors.

I decided to go to Bolivar Technical College after I noticed my grades taking a hit at the big university. It wasn't long before I realized this was where I was supposed to be. The classroom sizes were much smaller, the instructors knew my name and cared about my success, and I felt more prepared going into my nursing career than I think I would have been if I continued at the university.

I now owe my confidence and success in my nursing career to the instructors and my classmates at BTC, and I will always be thankful for my experience there."
